Potential Story
Angles/Ideas:

- Home health care
- Migration of healthcare to non-acute settings
- Fee-for-value vs. fee-for-service healthcare
- Demographic shifts in healthcare
- Serving patients with chronic diseases or receiving post-acute care

Michael Petras is president of AssuraMed, a leading mail-order, direct-to-customer provider of disposable medical products to chronic disease patients that was acquired by Cardinal Health in March 2013 and is currently being integrated into the Medical Segment.

Prior to joining AssuraMed, Petras worked for Connecticut-based General Electric where he served as president and Chief Executive Officer of GE Lighting. During his more than 18 years at GE, he held positions within Product Management, Six Sigma Quality and Sales.

Petras is a board member of The Cleveland Foundation and John Carroll University and serves on The Cleveland Clinic's Board of Trustees. He is also a past board member of Achievement Centers for Children, United Way of Cleveland and the Greater Cleveland Partnership. He holds a bachelor's degree in finance from John Carroll University and a Master's in Business Administration in marketing from Case Western Reserve University.
