- Reducing the cost of healthcare through supply chain efficiency
- GS1 standards for making the healthcare supply chain safer and more efficient

In an effort to help reduce healthcare costs, Mike Duffy, president of Medical Consumables, is focused on improving efficiency in the supply chain. In his role, Duffy is responsible for global manufacturing, global sourcing and the Cardinal Health-branded consumable product portfolio. He is also involved in the Healthcare Sector of GS1, a voluntary, global healthcare user group bringing together healthcare stakeholders, developing standards to make healthcare supply chain safer and more efficient.

In his previous role as president of Cardinal Health's Medical Supply Chain, Duffy led the Hospital Supply, Lab/Scientific Products and Ambulatory Care businesses. Prior to joining Cardinal Health, Duffy served as vice president of Global Value Chain at The Gillette Co., where he had global responsibility for customer service, revenue management, demand planing, distribution and promotions management.

Duffy is president of the Corporate Advisory Council at the University of Michigan's Ross School of Business Master of Supply Chain Management Program. He earned both a bachelor's degree in operations research and a master's degree in transportation from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.
